Anselm refers: "the sin of Adam was one thing but the sin of children at their birth is quite another, the former was the cause, the latter is the effect" [70] In a child original sin is distinct from the fault of Adam, it is one of its effects. This, I think, is the only case where there was a real separation of terminological spheres: there is nothing like a 'trikdya' doctrine in Hinduism, although the Kashmiri 'Trika' School of Saivism has traces of a threefold division of 'body' principles, possibly similar to the Vaisnava notion of the deity in its threefold aspect as 'attraction' Satnkarsana 'Unrestrainability' Animddhaand 'the purely mythological' Ddmodara.
